Exploring air quality, its regional impacts, and ways to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

How Greenhouse Gases Impact Our Health and Air Quality

Welcome to Climate Corner, the newest section of our newsletter! Each month, we'll dive into critical topics around air quality, exploring how climate changes affect our region and sharing ways you can help reduce greenhouse gas (GHG) emissions.

Greenhouse gases—such as carbon dioxide (CO₂), methane (CH₄), and nitrous oxide (N₂O)—trap heat in the atmosphere, contributing to rising global temperatures. As GHG levels increase, the Earth experiences warming, which disrupts weather patterns and leads to extreme events like heatwaves and floods. These shifts also harm air quality, worsening respiratory conditions such as asthma and extending allergy seasons. Over time, poor air quality can raise the risk of heart and lung diseases.

To monitor your local air quality, AirNow.gov provides real-time data and forecasts based on your zip code along with health recommendations based on the current air quality.

Stay tuned for actionable tips, updates on local initiatives, and insights into building a healthier, cleaner atmosphere together.

BETWEEN HOME & WORK

How Third Places Help Build Inclusive Communities

2024 FALL PLANNING WORKSHOP

Join us for a thought-provoking Fall Planning Workshop that delves into the crucial role of third places—those vibrant social spaces that exist beyond our homes and workplaces. These gathering spots, such as cafes, parks, libraries, campuses, community centers, and other unique gathering spaces, are essential for fostering inclusivity and strengthening community ties.

Workshop Highlights:

- Hear from experts in urban planning, community development, and social innovation on how third places transform neighborhoods and foster inclusivity.
- Explore successful examples of third places enhancing social cohesion and community engagement.
- Connect with professionals, leaders, and advocates to exchange ideas and best practices for inclusive gathering spaces.
